Muslim-majority Hindu minority in Kashmir, who by 1990 was becoming increasingly agitated by the screams. In the late 1960s, the number of Hindu students grew to 118,000, and the total number of students in higher schools reached 60,000. In the late 1970s and early 1980s, there was a growing number of Muslim students who also began taking degree examinations available to all Kashmiris. In Kashmir, Pakistan and Afghanistan, while the majority of the citizens of these three countries are Hindus, the percentage of Muslims among students in Kashmir was significant. Muslim students, especially in Pakistan, have a distinct aura among other Muslims and are often seen as a threat to the local community, although they have never taken any hostile action against Hindus during the conflict. In 1988, the number of Muslims in universities was eight times that of Indian students. The Kashmir War is ongoing and disputes over the status and rights of the Muslim-Indo-Kashmiri minority persist. None of the parties has full information about the incidents of that time. In early 1983, a lawsuit was filed at the International Court of Justice against the government of Pakistan against the government, which responded with accusations of contempt for freedom of religion and assembly. The Court had no jurisdiction in the Kashmir War as the province of Kashmir had been occupied by India since 1967. Peace talks on the Kashmir issue, which began in 1994, eventually led to the signing of the "Agreement for Peace in Kashmir" on June 16, 1996. Under the agreement, the Pakistani government reduced access to the Sutlej

Valley for the duration of the fighting, made Kashmiri Muslim refugees compulsory public school examinations, banned the building of mosques, and declared all Indian Shiites illegal. The subsequent procedure for the division of the Kashmir Peninsula, carried out by the Provisional Government, led to the preservation of the Muslim majority in the region. The 2002 constitutional reform greatly empowered minorities and minorities of religions and their representatives in political life. The third battle for Kashmir lasted from 2003 to 2007, as a result of which the balance of power in Kashmiri shifted in favor of Pakistan, which by 2006 both sides were confident. In 2009, a majority of the Kashmiri population voted in favor of independence in a referendum. The sixth round of talks in Peshawar in 2011 concluded with the signing of the
